Farms Reduced

"There were 50,000 dairymen in Michigan 15 years ago and there are 25,000 today and I don't see that the trend is going to change in the near future." said Dr. Lassiter "but I know of no aspect of agriculture in Michigan with any brighter prospect than dairying.

"It has been predicted that our dairymen will go down to 10,000, and other predictions are not so low. The day of the inefficient farmer is over. If they're not producing 8000 pounds of milk and 350 pounds of butterfat as a herd

"I think herds are going to be larger. At least 25 per cent of Michigan dairymen are losing money today and it would be better if they were not in the milk producing business.

Need New Products

"If farmers are not getting good crop yields they're not in good business; they don't get enough for their milk to permit it. And we've got to be able to market our milk and dairy products. If it hadn't been for the population explosion of the past 10 years we'd have had a great many more dropouts in dairving. "We hope we've stabilized the

The Upper Peninsula's most obvious resource and its greatest one is its forest. This resource is coming into a new perspective because of the push-out for recreational properties and because wood industry needs keep changing.

The Upper Peninsula's forests are more impressive to our visitors than to our residents, as a general thing, but there are many shadings of opinion when these two groups

The big city person is impressed north of Mackinac with the unending miles of forest. The forester looks at it with critical eye and speculates on its commercial value. The recreationist regards it as a great play place and wondersincreasingly-how he can acquire some of it for his own private pleasure.

A young teacher at the Teachers Conservation Scholarship School at Camp Shaw recently said: "I take my family camping downstate, where we live, and we can hardly crowd into the parks, there are so many people in them. I come up here and we see lakes owned by the state with nobody living on them. Why can't I buy some of that frontage and help the economy up here?

It's against the law, for one thing, but that's begging the question because the law can be changed. But it isn't apt to be with the present outlook in Michigan upon this matter. What the Upper Peninsula thinks about the management of its government lands isn't very important because it is such a small portion (about 3 per cent) of the state politically. It is the current will of the Lower Peninsula to keep the Upper Peninsula state lands as a state resource and play place. And besides, of course, the teacher would be in a great rat race of competition for the state lake frontage lot if the land were opened to purchase and might be bid out of the game because the supply isn't unlimited and the market is potentially huge. Too, there's private lake frontage for purchase.

No trucks or automobiles are allowed on the island, except for emergency vehicles such as fireengines. Boats provide the only regular means of approach to the island, although there is a small landing strip on the north side which is only for emergency Winter use, said Doyle.

The federal government is expected to provide $80,000 for the airport project, while the state and city of Mackinac Island would share the remaining costs equally. The city, said Doyle, intends to rely on a $40,000 bond issue to cover its share.

be offered for sale during the annual 4-H Fat Stock Auction to be held in the beef ring of the U. P. State Fair Grounds this evening at 8:30.

Grey Knaus of Cornell, superintendent of the beef breeds department, said he expects the show to be a good one because the quality of beef entered this year is noticeable superior to that of last year.

Knaus said there were 130 animals entered this year, compared with 80 during the 1962 show, an increase of 50 animals. "This year's show has been an excellent one. Not only is the stock much better, but there is a great improvement in the showmanship of the youngsters exhibiting the animals, he said.
